

ABSTRACT

In high-speed high-density recording, heat generation becomes a problem as high-frequency modulation and strong magnetic field of a magnetic head are realized.

A thermally coupling contact portion is extended from a part of a suspension and is brought into contact with a magnetic core, by which heat generated in a coil is dissipated to the suspension via the magnetic core and the thermally coupling contact portion.